

Tipoffs Shows Love for Training Directory Sponsors

By DanS

– February 14, 2011 Posted in: Arras People, Business & Social Media, DanS, Project Management Tipoffs, Project Manager Career, Tipoffs, project management careers advice

Happy Valentine's Day to all, and to all a good weariness of love hearts in all visible decoration!

Tipoffs for the month of February is out in three days, and we wanted you to know that we're switching it up a bit this time around. We're handing the content element over to some of the members who've been profiled on the Arras People Training Directory, as Tipoffs will serve as a grand-scale introduction of the directory, a portal designed to give all those interested in training some of the details on what is available, where it is available, and who can provide it.

Our list of contributors reads like a Who's Who at Project Challenge (a main sponsor this month, by the way!)

- Cornelis Vonk of ESI International asks if the PMO is, in fact, a training centre
- Rob Walters of RealWorld Training provides things to consider when choosing your trainer
- Paul Naybour of Parallel Project Training says the time has arrived for project managers to be counted
- ChangeQuest's Ranjit Sidhu narrates a clever video about project management communication
- Patrick Aylmer of The Learning People describes the importance of PMI certifications
- Trevor Mirams of Redtray goes all Letterman on us with a Top Ten List for successful project delivery
- Peter Measey & David Hicks of RADTAC extol the benefits of Pragmatic Agile
- Simon Harris of Logical Model personalises the big certifications around the world and their meaning
- Chris Ferguson of Novare Consulting on the project manager's path to professionalism.